

Jim Hoesterey is Associate Professor and Winship Distinguished Research Professor in the Study of Religion at Emory University. His research focuses broadly on Islam, media, and politics. Hoesterey's first book, Rebranding Islam: Piety, Prosperity, and a Self-Help Guru (Stanford Press, 2016) chronicled the rise and fall of Indonesian celebrity preacher Aa "elder brother" Gym. This book was awarded 2nd Place for the 2016 Clifford Geertz Book Prize in the Anthropology of Religion. With funding from the Henry Luce Foundation's program in Religion and International Affairs, Hoesterey's current book project explores public diplomacy, soft power, and the making of "moderate Islam." With training in visual anthropology, Hoesterey has also worked on documentaries broadcast worldwide on Discovery Channel, National Geographic, and the BBC.
