

Hussein Rashid, PhD, is founder of islamicate, L3C, a consultancy focusing on religious literacy. He is currently teaching at The New School and his research focuses on Muslims and American popular culture. His work includes exploring theology, the interaction between culture and religion. He co-edited a book on Kamala Khan/Ms. Marvel. He is currently co-editing a volume on Islam and Popular Culture, and another volume on Islam in North America. He is also co-authoring a cultural history of Muslims in America. He co-authored an SSRC report on Religion and Digital Humanities. His current projects include an independent film, a documentary, and a museum project on religion and jazz. He worked with the Children's Museum of Manhattan as a content expert on their exhibit "America to Zanzibar: Muslim Cultures Near and Far."